

INDIANA'S NEW LICENSE PLATE

Indiana has a new license plate! Apparently we were supposed to vote for our favorite from a number of possible designs. I'm still looking for someone who did or even cares. I suppose most people will keep their "In God We Trust" plates, that's about all you see around here.

I thought the new plate was missing something, a slogan, so I added a few possible slogans to the new design that seemed appropriate for a state full of sheep.

This one is dedicated to all the police officers and justice officials whose job security has been assured by Indiana's legislature. They will make sure that there is a never ending supply of goats to round up.

Now that Indiana has a state lottery, Daylight Savings Time, seatbelt laws covering virtually every vehicle, new taxes and bans on smoking, and are still looking for even more ways to punish the goats, this would be a good time to ask the question; if Ohio, Illinois, Michigan and Kentucky jumped off a cliff, would Indiana follow?

Of course if you're a lover of DST you'll have to get a tribute plate to royally screwing up Indiana's biological clock. Be sure and send all of DST's supporters in New York City and Washington DC a thank you note. Thank Mitch too.

No set of slogans would be complete without acknowledging the accomplishments of my neighbors in Wells county. Whoever was contemplating a law regarding aggressive drivers must have some experience with this place. This is a sterling example of how well laws work at changing peoples behavior.
